An incident in a Westfield church is related by the Springfield Bepublican as foltows: "A pretty story is told of two little children who went alone on a recent Surday to church. They took a seat mear the front, and after the minister bad got well into his sermon the smallest child whispered to his sister that he would like to go home. People who sat behind them beard the little girl tell him that he must not go without asking the minister's permission, so hand in hand they left their sest, and, standing before the clergyman, the little chap disped out his petition. The minister was naturally surprised, but without interrupting his discourse nodded his assent. That did not satisfy the children, and again the boy asked permission to go, and was answered by another nod. Then the little girl, fearing the min-ister had not understood her brother, said: Please, sir, may brother and I go home? The minister stopped and verbally granted the request, and with a sweet "thank you, sir,' and a couries, the daildren went down | cents for the 20-cent Nos. the aisle together. Because Lieutenant DeRudio, of Reno' command, risked his life in an effort to save his gridiron, the Worcester Spy is con-vinced that the care of the Indians should be given to the army. "Duf any one," it asks, "ever hear of an Indian agent who had a gridiron, much less of one who risked his life to save it?" Of course not; those who have observed the manners and eustoms of those peculiar people most closely assure us that no such utensil is known among them. The frying-pan usurps its place entirely, and, so far as they have influence with the savages, they use it in fa-vor of this pernicious implement. This fact sufficiently accounts for the discouraging results of all attempts to civilize the Indians.
